Description

A fabulous Edwardian amethyst and old-cut diamond lavalier necklace, dating to circa 1910. Beautifully handcrafted in 18-carat yellow gold, this wonderfully delicate necklace has an elegant openwork design characteristic of the Edwardian period. At its centre is a rich mauve-purple round-cut amethyst, finely millegrain collet set within a circular gold frame. A slender articulated knife-edge drop descends from the centre, punctuated by a sparkling old-cut diamond and terminating in a second round-cut amethyst. Two graceful navette-shaped openwork links decorate the necklace, each set with an old-cut diamond. Further diamonds are arranged along the adjoining links, with seven beautifully bright and lively old-cut diamonds in total. They sparkle wonderfully as the necklace moves and contrast beautifully with the vivid purple amethysts and warm yellow gold. The light, symmetrical construction gives the necklace an almost celestial appearance, while the articulated drop moves elegantly when worn. A particularly refined example of Edwardian jewellery, combining the delicacy of the period with subtle Art Nouveau influence. This enchanting necklace sits beautifully at the n...
