Description

Rare Small Early 17th-Century Oak Settle A rare and highly characterful small English oak settle dating from the early 17th century, displaying wonderful period construction and an attractive aged surface. The settle is traditionally constructed throughout, featuring pegged mortice-and-tenon joints and a panelled back, typical of early English vernacular furniture. Its compact proportions make it an especially appealing and practical example. The oak has developed a rich, warm colour and naturally aged patina, with the wear and character expected from a piece of this considerable age. Features include: Early 17th century Solid oak construction Panelled back Pegged mortice-and-tenon joints Desirable small proportions Rich aged colour and patina Strong period character Rare surviving example of early English furniture later adaptations A particularly appealing piece for the collector of early oak and vernacular furniture, while its smaller scale makes it equally suitable for a period or contemporary interior. A rare opportunity to acquire a small early 17th-century oak settle of considerable character. Buy from a trusted LAPADA dealer The best price for this item is alw...
