Description

Mixed media study of a recumbent nude lady, mounted on card surround with attribution to Etty to verso, and dated 1905. The whole mounted with a suspension loop and glazed to the rear. The painting is unframed, with some light bleaching and creases evident. Size of mount width 46cm x height 36.5cm WILLIAM ETTY. The first significant British painter of nudes, who famously produced numerous female life studies at the Royal Academy which was close to his home in Buckingham Street. In some cases, these subjects were worked into a biblical or mythological narrative. Albeit extremely talented, Etty was shy and had a very limited social life. In a typical day he woke at 7 am, painting from around 9 or 10 am until 4 pm, after which he had a meal. Following the meal, he took a walk, and attended life classes between 6 and 8 pm. On returning home he drank two cups of tea, and went to bed at midnight.
