Description

This bureau bookcase came from a local farm where it had been for generations. It has had a good clean and has been rewaxed and buffed to give a lovely mellow finish both in colour and in the polishing of the Oak. It has brass handles and a fitted interior, very country layout. It dates from around 1700, a very very early example. Bureaus were first made in the latter half of the 1600s and were not abundant until much later of course, This must have been quite a revelation in rural areas at the time. The forged H hinges on the top doors are really lovely in our opinion, just so early and still working of course after 100s of years. We were commissioned to alter this cabinet, but without causing any lasting damage, to make into a concealed television cabinet. The top has been lined in black with the doors open it does just what was required. However the client has not been able to take this owing to illness, so it is available. If you have an old farm house or period cottage this could be perfect. Offering facilities for a desk of course it could also have a large computer screen in the top. Many possibilities. It can of course be used for its original purpose for a...
