Description

A charming late 19th to early 20th-century wall mirror with a decorative faux bamboo turned wooden frame, finished in a warm rich brown with a lovely aged patina. The rectangular mirror plate is surrounded by slender turned uprights and cross rails, with particularly attractive ring-turned finials extending beyond each corner. The original-style dark metal hanging chain adds to its character. The timber has developed variations in colour, rubbing and small marks through age, giving the mirror an authentic, decorative appearance. A very versatile size for a bathroom, bedroom, hallway or above a small console. Condition: Good antique condition with wear consistent with age and use. There are various small knocks, scratches, areas of rubbing and losses to the finish, particularly around the turned joints and finials. The mirror plate has some age-related spotting and marks. The back shows considerable age and wear. Please refer to the photographs for detail. Date: Circa 1890–1910
