Description

A decorative Edwardian inlaid mahogany tray top occasional table, dating to circa 1905. The rectangular top is finely decorated with satinwood banding and boxwood stringing, with a shaped central inlaid panel. Above sits a removable glazed serving tray, with a moulded mahogany frame and decorative brass carrying handles to either end. The table is raised on four slender square tapering legs, similarly decorated with fine line inlay and terminating in brass castors. The legs are united by elegantly shaped stretchers centred by a small rectangular undertier, also decorated with contrasting inlay. A useful and elegant Edwardian occasional table, the removable tray making it particularly suitable as a drinks or serving table. English, circa 1905.
