Description

Edwardian Oak Refectory Farmhouse Kitchen Dining Table – c.1900 – Seats 8 A superb Edwardian solid oak refectory farmhouse dining table, dating to circa 1900, with wonderful proportions, colour and character. The table features an impressive thick solid oak plank top with a beautifully aged scrubbed surface. Raised on substantial square, gently tapered solid oak legs, the table has a wonderfully simple and honest construction. The shallow frieze is an especially practical feature, providing generous knee room and making this an extremely comfortable table for everyday dining. With ample room to seat eight, it would make a fantastic family kitchen or dining table, equally at home in a period property, country house, barn conversion or contemporary interior. The oak has developed a great warm colour and rich natural patina, giving the table tremendous presence without losing its understated farmhouse character. Details: English, circa 1900 Edwardian period Solid oak construction Thick oak plank top Characterful scrubbed surface Square tapered legs Shallow frieze providing excellent knee room Comfortably seats eight Superb colour and naturally aged patina A handsome, ...
