Description

A beautiful and elegant antique Edwardian mahogany display cabinet, dating from approximately 1900–1915 and designed in the refined Sheraton Revival style. This is a particularly attractive example, featuring a slender upright form, delicate proportions and decorative inlaid detailing throughout. The upper frieze is decorated with a fine garland motif, while the central section features further floral and classical-style inlay. The cabinet is fitted with a pair of tall glazed doors, each decorated with striking curved astragal glazing forming an elongated oval pattern. The glazed sides add further lightness to the design and allow displayed objects to be viewed from several angles. Inside are three spacious shelves, ideal for displaying books, glassware, ceramics, collectibles or decorative objects. The light fabric-lined interior provides an attractive contrast to the darker mahogany frame. A particularly desirable feature is the presence of the original key, which remains with the cabinet. Very good antique condition with a solid and stable construction. There are minor marks, light scratches and signs of wear consistent with age and previous use, but nothing that...
