Description

A fine Regency rosewood chiffonier, dating to circa 1820, displaying particularly attractive figuring and a rich, warm colour throughout. The rectangular top sits above a single frieze drawer, fitted with lion mask and ring handles, over a pair of panelled cupboard doors. Each door is decorated with a distinctive Gothic pointed-arch panel, flanked by turned rosewood columns. The doors open to reveal a useful shelved interior, while the whole stands on a substantial plinth base with projecting block feet. The drawer is traditionally constructed with hand-cut dovetail joints, consistent with the early 19th-century date. A handsome and relatively restrained Regency chiffonier, the beautifully figured rosewood providing much of its decoration. Its compact proportions make it a particularly versatile piece for a drawing room, dining room, hallway or alcove. English, circa 1820.
