Description

An exceptional, highly desirable matching pair of 19th-century hand-carved natural stone garden troughs. Originating from a rural estate, these troughs feature a scarce and architecturally striking "D-shape" or semi-octagonal profile with beautiful chamfered, multi-faceted outer walls. Finding an identical matching pair of hand-carved stone vessels is incredibly rare in the architectural salvage market. Their matching proportions make them an ideal choice for a landscape designer or premium garden project requiring symmetry—perfect for flanking a grand garden doorway, a formal pathway entrance, or positioning as focal points on an outdoor terrace. Both troughs boast a magnificent, thick encrustation of natural green moss, historic lichen, and weathered stone patina built up over generations in the British countryside. To preserve this irreplaceable organic character, the stone remains completely uncleaned and untouched. Dating to the mid-19th century, these heavy-duty vessels were originally custom-carved to sit beneath natural springs or estate hand-pumps. As such, they are structurally sound making them highly versatile for use as traditional water features, alpine roc...
