Description

This is a superb example of a genuine William IV rosewood bracket clock by the premier company of that era George Yonge of The Strand, London. George Yonge was a clock maker from 1776 - 1832 and was maker to his majesty and also to The Lord High Admiral. His workshops were at 156 The Strand, London and the firm was dissolved in 1833. The twin fusee movement is a wonderful piece of engineering and as you can see is in tip top condition. It strikes on the hours on a bell. The rosewood case has a wonderful rich colour and patina with carved floral motifs which is typical of the period, this is complimented by the original white painted dial which is in perfect condition and a contrasting brass door. The movement has just undergone a full overhaul, clean and service by Alan Williams who is a Fellow of the British Horological Institute so you can be assured that this clock is in tip top condition and will give trouble free service for many years to come. This is the best Regency clock we have had in the last ten years and a rare opportunity to own a clock from this period by a premier maker in such incredible condition. The clock comes with a key. It is keeping...
