Description

This late Victorian spelter winged cherub lamp is in excellent condition with no signs of repair or damage. The cherub is holding a torchere light and is standing on what we think is an Eagle with it's wings spread wide. We had the light rewired to UK specifications using fabric cable and fitted with an online switch. The last few photographs have been lightened so that the details of the figure, bird and the ornate base can be seen easily. The lovely details of the cherubs face can also be seen. The lamp measures 74cm in height (to the tip of the shade) and approximately 23cm in width - that is across the wing span of the Eagle, and the widest part of the base. The base is triangular in design, and has the face of a classical maiden on each side, and pretty scroll feet. Seen clearly in photo 4. It can be viewed and collected from the Surrey area, or we can arrange for quotes for delivery/postage to be given.
