Description

CHRISTOPHER FRATIN: a fine French bronze "animalier" study of a lurcher, alert with ears pricked and tail wagging. Excellent patina, and signed in the flat-sided integral base. Old paper label to the underside of the base.

* Christopher FRATIN (1800-1864); "...little is known of this fascinating and highly competent sculptor of the animalier school. His understanding of the form and structure of many of his animals gives them an eerie realism; many of his animals appearing rather thin by modern well-fed standards..." (excerpt from "Animals in Bronze" by Christopher Payne, page 404)
