Description

Quality Two Tier Dumb Waiter Table - Superb Condition - c1780 This two tier English Georgian dumb waiter table is a lovely example presented in stunning condition and displaying quality throughout with fine inlay. 'Dumb waiters' were used in the 18th century as an adjunct to the dining table - being placed near the table so diners could reach for extra dishes without the requirement of a servant. A superbly proportioned tripod cabriole base leg set rides on desirable wide inset brass castors. A tapered and turned column provides support to a circular under-tier which benefits from a pleasing perimeter lip, and offers a useful 59cm (23.2") diameter providing ample space for display and presentation. Tier two is supported by a further classically understated Georgian English turned column leading to the the upper tier which presents a fine solar burst central cartouche in boxwood and holly. The piece offers great scope for a variety of uses would make a wonderful lamp, occasional or display table, and of course serves wonderfully as a dumb waiter - perfect to present morning coffee or afternoon tea. Overall this piece of furniture is in superb order with great depth...
