Description

Edwardian Mahogany Antique Writing Table / Desk. Dating from around 1900 this antique mahogany writing table / desk dates from the Edwardian period. It has a raised back with two small mahogany lined drawers above the original faux leather writing surface. Below the top can be found a further two mahogany lined drawers with swan neck handles. The desk is supported by tapering legs with spade feet which are finished with the original brass castors. The desk shows signs of wear (not surprising since it is over a hundred years old) in particular the writing insert. This would appeal to the lover of pieces proud of their age however the leather could easily be replaced making it attractive to a whole new audience! It has aged to a medium shade of mahogany with a striking grain, good patina, is in very good condition and has been beautifully cleaned using a traditional form of wax finishing.
