Description

Imposing English Arts and Crafts movement dresser sideboard attributed to the celebrated British designer Leonard Wyburd for Liberty & Co. c.1895. Display dresser top with large flared cornice, a single glazed door (with one 'bull's eye' panel) and plate rack. Over a distinctive flared base with single drawer and two large cupboards. Solid oak construction throughout. Excellent condition retaining the original decorative ironwork, leaded glass and Liberty & Co. stamped locks. Typically for Wyburd the design references British vernacular furniture (the traditional high back dresser) whilst introducing new forms and the influence European Art Nouveau in the flared shape of the base and decorative detail to the hinges. It was this distinctive blend of styles produced in solid English oak which came to define the Liberty look of this period. Dimensions: width 75", depth 25", height 74".
