VICTORIAN BRASS HALL LANTERN

Description

This hall lantern dates from around the late 19thC - early 20thC and was originally used with an oil lamp. It has been photographed resting on a table which doesn't show it at its best, so we will try and hang it and take further photographs soon. It is in beautiful condition, with the original superb etched glass on all sides. The panel that opens has a brass 'hand' as a handle - (see main photo and photo 2). Our electrician has converted it to electricity to UK specifications so that it holds a standard bayonet light bulb. The lantern measures 54cm up to the ceiling fitting, and 65cm to the end of the brass pole, and it is 23cm square. There are no dents or misshapen panels, although the light bouncing off the brass gives a slightly wavy look to the edges, and patches of black - none of which exists in reality. Viewing by appointment can be made in Surrey, or alternatively we can supply quotes for delivery around the UK mainland. For outside the UK mainland delivery, please email us for information.
