Description

Victorian stacking bookcase. Nice carpentry, made of mahogany. Salvaged from a school, each section sits directly on top of each other - can obviously be arranged in any way you like eg, used individually, pair up etc. Some very minute differences between them - some are run through, some are divided into two compartments. NO key, but all doors can be easily opened / shut and stay opened / shut on their own without the locks. To the best of my knowledge, one of the glass panels might have been replaced sometime in the past but others are original. I got them years ago with an intension to sell on but fell in love with it and have been using them in my study since. Not in the top condition like my other stocks but perfectly suitable to use immediately without any restoration - please study my photos carefully and I would recommend viewing in person just to make sure. My study has been redecorated for another purpose. Priced to sell and not aiming to gain any profit.
