Description

A very high quality Regency period LADY'S WRITING BOX of unusual design and in particularly fine original condition. Constructed of rosewood, the lid is inlaid with profuse brass scrollwork, while it is bound with brass corners and fitted with recessed military-style recessed handles. The lid opens to reveal the pretty interior, with a red leather 'pouch' within the lid; pair of original in bottles with ormolu lids and a blue gilt-tooled leather writing surface that folds out and rests on pretty little brass ball feet for use. A delightful writing box of a design we have not previously seen. The quality of this suggests it is possibly by Edwards, box maker to the Royal Family?
