Description

Thomas MOSS of LONDON No. 123: a good late Georgian mahogany BRACKET CLOCK of quite small proportions. The mahogany case features a cast handle within a brass-edged pad to the top; the door is fitted with a fine brass bezel and convex glass; slender brass columns to the sides and with fretwork panels beneath the original painted dial and original gilt hands. The 8-day movement, which retains its original anchor escapement, strikes hours on a bell, and repeats hours at will. Both pendulum bob and backplate are partially engraved and there is "Strike/Silent" control above the dial, whilst dial & backplate are signed and numbered '123'. 14ins high. THOMAS MOSS worked in Ludgate St., London from 1775; he became a member of the Clockmakers Company in 1786 and he died in 1827. Many of his clocks are numbered.
