Description

An important 19th century exhibition quality giltwood bijouterie table by Trollope & Sons, with original trade label. . Oak with carved and gilded rococo decoration and elegant wavy cross stretchers with raised carved finial. The gilding original and in excellent condition for age and the glass original also with a few fine scratches, visible only under a strong light when the top is lifted. Original lock with working key and original crushed rose velvet lining, the nap with some impressions from earlier contents but these could be lifted out in our view. . A particularly skillful cabinet maker, George Trollope opened his shop in Parliament Street, London in around 1780. By 1843 the Company had grown in stature and reputation and his two sons had joined him in the business. He re-registered the Company as George Trollope & Sons and opened a large new showroom, called The Museum of Decorative Art in Belgravia. The showroom proved a huge attraction and their fine work was greatly sought after. The Company had many wealthy and well known patrons including members of the aristocracy, politicians and high profile international clients. . Trollope & Sons work is considered to b...
