Description

A magnificent pair of Louis XVI transitional style 19th Century French marble topped commodes after the original model by J.H. Riesener. Having breche d'alep marble tops with slightly bowed centre sections and a moulded edge. Each frieze is inset with one long drawer, flanked by two short drawers with finely cast floral mounts and with a further two deep drawers below also with finely cast floral mounts. The centre sections are finely decorated with a marquetry panel depicting vases and baskets of flowers in exotic coloured inlays, flanked by marquetry panels in Kingwood and rosewood. Having similar marquetry inlaid panels to the sides, all profusely mounted with finely gilded ormolu with pendant roses, scrolling acanthus and circular rope twist handles to the drawers. The whole supported on cabriole supports sheathed at the knees with claw feet. French circa 1880-1900 Dimensions: 45" wide x 23" deep x 33" high Jean-Henri Riesener (German: Johann Heinrich Riesener) (4 July 1734 – 6 January 1806) was the French royal ébéniste, working in Paris, whose work exemplified the early neoclassical "Louis XVI style". Riesener was born in Gladbeck, Westphalia, Germany, moved to Paris in 1755.
