Description

We are pleased to offer this oil on canvas by the artist FRANCIS E. JAMIESON, who has signed the painting in the lower left hand corner. According to the pencil writing on the back of the stretcher, the scene depicts a Loch in Perthshire, in Lochaber, Highlands. - The view depicted is a sunset scene of Eilean Ghleann Fhionainn (eileann meaning island in Gaelic) and its mountainous backdrop. - This island is close to Glenfinnan and the Jacobite Monument stands just out of view on shore to the left of the painting. The island is 1.02 kilometres long. - Francis Jamieson was a painter in oil and watercolour of highland landscapes and coastal scenes. (The work of this highly prolific artist is curious since the oils and watercolours have two quite distinctive styles and subject matter. The oil paintings are most frequently seen and these are highland landscapes or loch scenes - sometimes they appear to be signed with pseudonyms such as 'W. Richards' and 'Phil Hips' - the location is usually inscribed on the reverse. The watercolours are often coastal scenes with boats and figures on a shore, painted in a more traditional Victorian style and possibly pre-date the oils. F. E....
