Description

A 19th Century European carved hanging three-door Renaissance Revival cabinet circa 1870. Of an extremely high standard of carving having an unusual protruding rural villager pointing outward from the middle door (with wart to the chin!) this hanging cabinet is very good quality with a lovely colour. The top having a moulded cornice over and carved frieze and three ornately carved and decorative doors, each being flanked by a pair ring turned and fluted columns. The doors open to reveal two adjustable shelves for storage. Originally from France or possibly Flemish constructed having a lower section this has been converted into a very decorative and useful hanging unit that boasts excellent carvings with a lovely colour. Offered in excellent condition with an original working key a good item for any traditional kitchen. Measurements are to the widest points being the cornice.
