Description

This attractive inlaid mahogany display cabinet from circa 1900 or perhaps a little touch later is in good overall condition. The inside is tidy and clean, it has been relined possibly by the previous owner, it is not the best job in the world but by far from the worst. The polish is original, a little reassuring light fade but with nice colour, a few little scuffs but very minor. The inlays are in lovely condition and look good down the bowed centre. The stringing around the doors is all as it should be and the whole cabinet sits on a rather pleasing splay leg. The doors carry a central inlaid oval which is a nice little feature. There is a key to open and lock the doors. Inside there have been fitted lights to show off the contents. These can remain or be easily removed if that is your choice. They are currently all working as intended. Very sensible price too.
