Description

A superb George III mahogany press or estate cabinet of beautiful small proportions. With the unusual feature of the doors locking at 90 degrees by means of original metalwork, this enables the slides to be fully withdrawn outside of the cabinet whilst contained within the doors. The feature and also the lack of the front edge on the slides leads me to believe this was designed to store maps or other documents as it allows easy access in good to inspect them. Could equally be used today for linen or in the dining room. The base with twin doors opening to reveal wonderfully fine oak lined drawers. I think they perhaps housed some sort of collection. Of superb colour & patination.
