Description

Stunning Edwardian marquetry inlaid rosewood drawing room cabinet in very good original condition. Very nice design from the period and obviously made by one of the top furniture making companies of the day. The cabinet breaks down into two piece for moving and is then screw together once in place. The bottom section has a pair of cupboard door in the middle with a drawer above, the drawer being all mahogany lined. The top section has a mirror in the middle with glazed cabinet doors on either side. The glazed doors are superb, every piece of individual glass is beveled all round. The cabinet comes with its original key which operates all the locks perfectly. One of the nice features about this piece is although it is in effect quite large it is very narrow and because of it airy design it doesn't look big. The piece is in very good condition with no veneer repairs that I can see, the only slight damage is the right hand side turned column in the middle section has been damaged at some point in the past and repaired but once in place it doesn't notice. As good a piece from this period I have seen. SIZE; 54" long by 15" deep by 91" tall. From the ground to the flat top...
