Description

A fine Georgian occasional table made from rich Cuban Mahogany, dating from the late 18th Century. It has a typical 'tilt-top' mechanism and still has the original latch. The top is set on a birdcage support which allows the top to revolve freely on the base which slots right through the birdcage and is secured with a small wedge. The table is set on a turned column and tripod splayed legs. The top is a solid thick piece of mahogany, original to the base, but which has been later carved in a rather spectacular design of leaves, wheat sheaths and thistles - perhaps an indication of a Scottish owner at one point. The carving is superb quality and makes the table a superb statement piece. It is in excellent condition and has developed a wonderful rich colour and is strong and sturdy with a good level top. There are some small marks, stains, knocks and minor signs of use and age but no major damages or anything detrimental.
