Description

Victorian mahogany horse shoe shaped desk chair We are pleased to offer you this Edwardian mahogany horse shoe shaped desk chair. This was made circa 1880 in a fine mahogany. It is in the desirable horseshoe shape, a design that makes it very comfortable to sit at. We have upholstered this in fine leather, and is hand dyed by our craftsmen. The brass studs that secure the leather to the frame, are tapped in individually, something that not only takes skill but also lots of patience. The horseshoe shaped arms are supported by well turned spindles, that add strength but also a great decorative look. The well turned solid front legs ending with brass castors. Imagine sitting at this chair behind your desk as you work. It is bound to attract favourable comments and your family and friends will wish to try it out. When this was first made, we should wonder what the news of the day was, and what world events were being played out. This was the time of the 'Great London fog' had it cleared, or was the capital of Great Britain still engulfed by it? The alarming news that the Boars had declared independence, an event that went on to trigger the First Boar War. On a lighter note di...
