Description

A large 16th century limestone column originally part of the integral structure of Beverly minster chapter house that was destroyed in 1548 during the reformation. The column has beautifully carved gothic tracery on all sides except one, where it would have butted up against a wall. The column comes apart into three sections and has a lot of wear and damages to the tracery, all commiserate with age but over all in good condition. This column would make a fantastic pedestal for a large statue.
