Description

Victorian 1880's mahogany extending dining table This Victorian 1880's mahogany extending dining table was made in a top workshop of the period to be sold in one of the prestige high street retailers. Here we have this extending dining table that takes 2 extra leaves. This dining table, made circa 1880, winds out on a telescopic action. This allows the extra leaves to be added for use. You may use this table with any combination of leaves. You may want to use it closed without leaves or add one leaf for a larger party or both leaves set in to allow you to seat 10 or more. This solid mahogany table has rounded corners and a finely turned mahogany leg to each corner. Each leg has the original china wheel castor and brass collar. Imagine sitting and entertaining with your friends and family at this dining table. Having a leg to each corner, makes the table very stable during use. The dining table extends by using a winding handle, that when turned, opens the table out very easily, on a patented telescopic spiral worm. When this table was first made, the owners may well have sat around the table, horrified about the military disaster at Isandlwana during the Anglo-Zulu war,...
