Description

Mezzotint, 'Sergeant Major Patrick Gould, Royal Regiment Edinburgh Volunteers (Blue) 1794', after the portrait painted by George Watson, engraved by John Young, Engraver in mezzotint to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, London', Edinburgh, published by F. Garos, printseller, South Hanover Street, December 1810, within a sympathetic ebonised and gilt gadrooned frame in the period style with old glass 57cm x 38cm Stock Reference: LH 1017 Another example of this print is held in the collection of the National Galleries, Scotland (Accession No. SP V 106.1) The Edinburgh (or, as they were afterwards called, the Royal) Volunteers, were embodied in 1794. were only distinguished by their swords. The regiment, being assembled in Heriot's Green on the 26th September, 1794, was presented with a stand of colours by the Lord Provost (Sir James Stirling), attended by the two senior Magistrates, the Principal of the University, and the whole Members of the Town Council, in their robes. The colours were very handsome: the one elegantly embroidered with a crown, and the letters G. R.; and the other with the City Arms. A vast crowd of spectators attended to witness the presentation.
