Description

Highly versatile C18th George III period mahogany D-ended dining table with various configuration options in 'as found' country-house condition . Comprising of a pair of D-ended sections with reeded edge tops and friezes raised on square section tapering legs , a gatelegged centre section with folding drop-leaf and single spare leaf . The whole table can be used constructed as a large dining table secured by original brass forks and receptors , or used in parts to form a table of varying scale . All sections with a corresponding reeded edge detail. The pair of D-ended sections each with pull-out bearers to support a single leaf option , then allowing the drop- leaf centre to be used as a side or serving table option. Alternatively the D-ends can be used together without the leaf as an ovoid table , or separated as elegant demi-lune console , pier or side tables . Superb quality heavy timber with its original 'skin' and polish. Various slight differences in colour and patination where sections have been used or stored separately in different degrees of exposure to sun-light and wear. Various marks and stains to the top and minor knocks to the edges , commensurate with ag...
