Description

A lovely 17th century English draw-leaf table of small proportions and with superb colour and patination. The table is of typical construction, consisting of a three piece top and the ends drawn from underneath the central leaf. The base consists of four finely turned baluster legs joined by peripheral stretchers and standing upon turned feet. Below the table top, the table is decorated with a front and back rail consisting of rows of carved knurling and below that a carved apron running all the way round. The frieze would have originally had a draw in one side, however this has been lost in time. The table has had some wood worm damage and some old repairs all commiserate with age. The overall condition of the table is excellent. Measurements - (Table not extended) Width 120cm x Depth 74.5cm x Height 78cm (Table extended) Width 201cm x Depth 74.5cm
