Description

A most rare and beautiful cloisonné vase by Yoshida Tamura, probably constructed using experimental methods. The body of the vase is made to resemble rusted iron, the top and bottom mounts are rust induced with small amounts of enamel on the top surface. The thick enamel body is probably intended to imitate the reduction glazes of turn of the century European pottery makers. The flower head decoration is in standard cloisonné whilst the stalks and leaves are musin enamel. There are strips of silver placed vertically under the enamel, probably to depict falling rain. All in all a most unusual and elegant vase. The tomobako signed ' cloisonné vase Yoshida Tamura '. Purchased from an important collection whose owner concentrated on important and unusual Japanese enamels.
