Description

William IV rosewood library table This William IV rosewood library table was first made circa 1830. The library table stands on end supports, that run down to a platform base with lovely segmented turned feet and concealed castors under. It has a pair of slim mahogany lined drawers to the front, and then dummy drawers to the rear, it was designed in this manner so that the table could be placed in the centre of a room, or a bay window. The top has rounded corners and a rosewood surface above the end supports are fine carved scrolls. Imagine this elegant William IV table in your home, it will look great in so many places. You could use it as a hall table, put it in a bay window, use it as a side table and of course use it in a library or office study setting. 99cms wide (39ins) 53cms deep (21ins) 73cms high (28 3/4ins) 63cms high from floor to underside of table (24 1/2ins) All dimensions are approximate.
