Frederick Brill (1920-1984). Frederick Brill was associated with Chelsea School of Art for over thirty years. He was so well known for his support to students, struggling artists and the more pertinent causes on behalf of art schools, that many wondered how he ever found time to paint. His copy (at the age of sixteen) of the Michelangelo in the National Gallery (No.1) and his Italian sketchbooks illustrate his considerable powers of perception and great skills in recording. His interest in the Pennines had been aroused during the war years by being evacuated, with the Royal College of Art, to Ambleside. The acquisition of a hous...
