Description

George III mahogany Lancashire bureau This George III mahogany Lancashire bureau was made circa 1820. These North Country desks were made to show the wealth of the owner, hence the important size, the quality of the timber and craftsmanship in making this handsome piece. This fine example is fitted with five drawers each with the original brass swing handles. The drawers have oak linings. To each side of the drawers are cluster reeded columns. It stands on ogee shaped bracket feet. The fall opens to reveal a magnificent inlaid interior of a central cupboard, drawers and pigeonholes. The fall has an inset baize writing surface. This George III mahogany Lancashire bureau has the double wow factor of not only the impressive front when the fall is closed to the breath-taking interior once it is opened. Imagine the conversations you will have as your family and friends wonder at the quality of this as well as finding the secret drawers. We believe that this is an item that you will treasure forever and will give you so much enjoyment being the owner of. 122cms wide 48ins 58cms deep 23ins 110cms high All measurements are approximate This bureau is a finite item that also is a very g...
