Description

(Gottlieb Daniel) Paul Weber (German 1823 - 19160, Young nymphs dancing beside a river in a wooded landscape with fields beyond, oil on canvas laid down on board, within original gilt frame with foliate decoration at the rounded corners. Paul Weber is primarily known as a landscape painter. Born in Darmstadt in 1823 he was the son of the composer Johann Daniel Weber. He studied art in Frankfurt at the Städelschule from 1844 to 1848 and then with Josephus Laurentius Dyckmans in Antwerp. He went on to study at the Munich Academy, during which time he accompanied Prince Regent Luitpold of Bavaria on a trip to the Eastern Mediterranean, which led him to Constantinople, Asia Minor, Greece and Sicily. In 1848 after the collapse of the German Republic, he moved to the United States, settling in Philadelphia, where he was a frequent exhibitor at the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts from 1849 onward. He also exhibited at the National Academy of Design, the Brooklyn Art Association, the Boston Atheneum, the Washington Art Association, and the Paris Salon. Among his students in the class of landscape painting were William Trost Richards, William Stanley Haseltine and Edward...
