Description

This English campaign chest of drawers retains an attractive and sought after patina - its colour and surface both reflect its history. These attributes always, in my mind, enhance such a piece. This two-part military chest is predominantly made from teak, with the drawer linings constructed from ash. Its handles and brass strap-work are all original and a key is supplied that fits and works every lock apart from one. The top-right hand drawer was intended to hold important items and as such was secured by a Bramah lock. Cutting a key for this secure and intricate lock is prohibitively expensive but can be done if requested. As you would expect its feet are removable for transportation. This campaign chest has been professionally and sensitively conserved - in my mind, less is always more when restoring campaign furniture.
