Description

This is a late Georgian decanter, circa 1830. It was hand blown from lead crystal and has cut detail. It has a cut conical stopper and a bulb shaped body. The stopper doesn't quite sit perfectly in the decanter, so it might not be the original stopper. It sits proud by about 3mm and wobbles slightly. There is some wear to the tip of the stopper. There is wear to the underside of the decanter. The rim of the neck is not perfectly round so it is possible it may have been ground at some point, or it may be from the manufacturing process. Otherwise it appears in good order.
