Description

A superb Georgian Mahogany Long Case clock which is dated to around 1750. The clock is by a good quality London maker, Thomas Jarvis of St James who according to Baillie worked in the 1750's and died 1778. The case is a nice mahogany of very good quality and colour. The door has a figured mahogany front, brass hinges and retains a working lock. The brass dial has silvered chapter ring and working strike/silent dial, overall the dial is in nice original unrestored condition. The good quality four pillar 8day movement is in good working condition and runs well and keeps good time. It is powered by two brass cased weights. The overall height of the clock is 87"
