Description

An exquisite example of a pair of early 20th century painted decoy ducks. They retain traces of their original paint in off-white, light grey, and dark grey, and they also have all of their original glass eyes. With each head turned gently to one side they really do make quite a charming impression; they would display wonderfully as a work of art in any room in the house. These beautiful decoy ducks — so rare for being a genuine pair — are English, dating from around 1910. . . .
