Description

A traditional 19th Century oak cricket table standing on round, tapering legs, terminating with pad feet. There has been historic restoration to the legs, this has been well done and is not detrimental to the look or stability of the table. The table stands evenly and the legs are sturdy. There is evidence of old woodworm, long dead, but treated again for peace of mind. The present condition is compatible with a country table of this age. This is a very attractive, rustic table of good size and is full of character. A really useful and decorative piece. c.1820
