Description

Victorian oak writing table This Victorian oak writing table was made circa 1865. I attribute this to have been made in the workshops of Gillow (who made a smaller chamber table with the central lifting flap as this one shown here) If not Gillows it would be Holland Sons who again were prestige cabinetmakers of the time. The top wit a fine inset leather writing surface, the wonderful lifting flap that reveals the pen tray and the original ink bottles both remarkably still with their turned oak lids. The Victorian oak writing desk is finished all the way around with dummy drawers to the back, this means it can be used away from a wall. The inset leather is hand dyed and gilt tooled, then finished to look original, this is an exceedingly difficult and skilled process. It stands on fine turned legs that flow into the flush fitting cup castors. 122.5cms wide 48ins 55.5cms deep 21 3/4ins 77.5cms high 30 1/2ins All measurements are approximate This Victorian oak writing table is an item that is a very green product that has not affected the environment we live in.
