Description

Extremely fine and of small proportions, George IV (late Regency) mahogany sofa table attributable to William Trotter of Edinburgh. Scottish, Circa 1825. Of unusually small proportions and almost certainly made by William Trotter of Edinburgh. The crossbanded drop-leaf rectangular top, above a inset finely gadrooned panelled drawer, enclosed by conforming rectangular panels, over a lobed baluster reeded and carved tapering stem supported by a Quattro form base of carved out splayed hipped sabre legs terminating in the original gilt scrolled capped castors. Wonderful natural colour of the outstanding timber used. The overall quality of this table including choice of timber, various design elements, the fine gadrooning, design of the base and castors used are all indicative of the highly regarded Scottish cabinet maker of this period William Trotter of Edinburgh. William Trotter (1772-1833) was the son of Thomas Trotter a member of The Edinburgh Merchant Company of which he became a member of himself in 1797. In 1809 he was the sole proprietor of the firm Young & Trotter, furnishing the library and picture gallery designed by the architect Robert Reid at Paxton House...
