Description

An exceptional Anglo Indian armchair profusely carved dating to the mid 19th Century. Bombay India circa 1840. Extremely well drawn, this design is rarely seen following closely in the footsteps of the English Regency period with its elegant shape and extended paw foot. Constructed from teak having an elaborately finely pierced and carved shaped back and arms over a drop in sprung squab seat, newly upholstered in a grey linen, raised on extended paw feet and shaped legs to the rear. A wonderfully decorative armchair which is also very comfortable having the deeply sprung seat and shaped back. In excellent condition having a lovely original waxed patina. This is one of the finest examples we have seen of its type, worthy of any good collection. The design and style of carving is typical of that from the Bombay area of India in the 19th Century where highly carved furniture was sought after as ownership showed a sign of wealth. Known as Bombay Blackwood, due to the dark hues of the Rosewood and Malabar teak used to produce the furniture. We can not find a comparable design to this armchair in our research therefore it is likely this was commissioned for noble / wea...
