Description

A superb Bloor Derby plate circa 1825 decorated with a bouquet of flowers to the centre on a deep blue background. Verso impressed 'Bloor'. The Derby Porcelain Company, later called Royal Crown Derby, is currently the oldest British porcelain factory still in production. Derby pottery has gone through many iterations from the mid 1700s to today. In the 1820s, it came under the ownership of Robert Bloor and was named "Bloor Derby". As the company was in financial difficulty Robert Bloor had to find a way to turn it around. Finding a large stock of less-than-perfectly potted items that had been rejected, he decided to create a large range of cobalt blue items with busy flower paintings, which would hide the small imperfections in the glaze. Against expectations, this range of deeply coloured wares became very popular. Condition: Very Good (Tiny bit of wear to gilt on the rim and central gilt band but no chips or cracks). Diameter: 26 cms Period: c1825 All of the items that we advertise for sale have been as accurately described as possible and are in excellent condition, unless otherwise stated.
