Description

This large Victorian wall light has a bracket that is designed to be mounted on a corner. It would have originally been powered by gas. It has now been converted to electric. As you can see from the pictures some of the lead work around the top is missing or damaged - we don't think this takes away from the piece. The bracket is made out of steel. The lamp itself is in copper, brass, steel and the glass hinged front is enamelled. There is a flange on the inside of the door which goes up inside which I think would make it fairly waterproof. We love the green colour of it. This light weighs 14 kg st 2179
