Description

Regency style mahogany dining table This Regency style mahogany banded dining table was made circa 1920. This Regency style mahogany dining table is made in the classic design of the Georgian era. The cabinetmaker chose redundant period timber to construct this table. In this period there was a fantastic selection of high-quality Georgian timber available to the independent cabinetmakers. They were able to take this timber and make the tables using a mahogany that was not available as it had been cut down generations before. A table of these dimensions are good for cottages as well as the modern home. The beauty of this is that not only its looks fantastic but also it seats 8. The solid mahogany top has a deep banding of fruitwood. You can use this table closed without the extra leaf or when you wish to sit more around it you can set the leaf in place. The leaf has a striking heart in the centre that adds to the overall attraction of this table. The cabinetmaker obviously planned the set up of the table to have this wonderful feature to be in the centre. The table stands on well proportioned gun barrel turned pedestals with tripod bases ending with brass claw feet with ...
